ROLL BACK PRICES!! BEFORE PRICES ROLL US INTO A DEPRESSION!!!

We are paying more and getting less because big business is giving less and getting more. Never in history have profits for the monopolies been so fabulous!

At the same time, our wages are frozen. President Nixon has seen to that!

The monopolies rob us by day and steal our pocketbooks by night, depending on what hour we are shopping.

PROTEST!

GET TOGETHER IN COMMUNITY CONSUMER GROUPS. ONLY TOGETHER, CAN PRICES BE ROLLED BACK!

Demand a law to do just that!
Demand it of our Congressmen!

FBI - NEW YORK

The World Congress of Peace Forces was held in Moscow on October 26-31, 1973. It was the broadest forum in the history of public movements uniting people belonging to 120 international and over 1,500 national organisations and movements in 143 countries.

Seven days of frank discussion in the spirit of a constructive dialogue, taking into account various attitudes, enabled us to make a comprehensive examination of urgent and difficult problems of the present day.

The World Congress has been an important milestone in the development of the efforts of the peoples for the defence and the building of peace. It has made an invaluable contribution towards greater understanding and cooperation among organisations holding very different political and other views. This will give fresh impetus to common action.

Much of what has taken place on the international scene recently fills us with hope and inspiration. There are signs, for the first time since the Second World War, that the threat of another disaster, much more terrible for its possible consequences, is beginning to recede. The concept of peaceful coexistence is winning more and more adherents in and outside governments. There is greater understanding that concern for world peace and security cannot be the affair solely of a small number of major powers. This understanding is prompting countries-big, medium and small, with a view to various blocs and groups of the world-to become more actively involved in the broad international effort of détente and to the significant turn from hostility, confrontation and estrangement to meaningful, equal cooperation.

But much of what is happening today causes anxiety and worry. Relaxation in some areas is accompanied by explosions of tension and aggression in others, which inevitably make an ominous impact on international relations generally. The efforts to slow down the arms race are still encountering considerable resistance from the military-industrial complexes and from militarist, openly fascist and racist regimes. Despite the pretence of decolonisation, colonialism in various forms still denies to peoples their independence and their inherent right to be the unchallenged masters in their own countries. Gullible efforts seek to revive the cold war and thereby adversely affect the recent favourable changes in the international climate.

Together we have considered what can and must be done in this situation by the peace forces through the power of world opinion. We have come to the conclusion that it is necessary to take vigorous and concerted action, leaving aside all that divides us, to help foster the progress now under way towards peace and security. Drawing upon their fruitful work, the 14 Commissions of the Congress drew up the positive results of their discussions and conclusions and worked out a common approach to problems, whose successful solution, we are certain, will be the guarantee that the successes achieved in the 1970s will lead to a durable peace on our planet.

We attach paramount importance to the following problems.

PEACEFUL COEXISTENCE AND INTERNATIONAL SECURITY

Peace cannot be ensured without the worldwide acceptance and implementation of the principle of the peaceful coexistence of states, regardless of their social systems.

Peaceful coexistence is not simply an absence of war; it gives each nation the possibility of upholding its independence and sovereignty within inviolable frontiers and, on that basis, promoting balanced development, ensuring equality and concerted action by nations in the interests of peace and social progress.

Peaceful coexistence does not signify reconciliation with injustice. On the contrary it presupposes that aggression is effectively checked and that the nations have the right to fight by all necessary means for their political and economic liberation and social progress, to freely determine their own destiny without any outside interference. For this reason it is in keeping with the interests and ethical aims of peoples about the principles that must underlie a just peace.

Peaceful coexistence rules out the use of force in the relations between countries and predetermines the truly peaceful character of the various means of settling disputes and differences. This is precisely what makes it the most dependable foundation of international security. Such a foundation cannot be provided by a "balance of fear", which is unstable and dangerous, for it preserves and justifies war preparations, sustains a military background for the solution of international problems and aggravates the military confrontation between groups of countries.

The alternative to this, and it is a quite realistic alternative, is to create the political, economic, social, cultural and psychological guarantees of security. This is the only way to end the division of the world into opposing military and political blocs and to settle other cardinal aspects of military defence. On this road the United Nations can fulfil its role as an effective instrument of international security in full measure.

INDOCHINA

The victory of the Vietnamese people, recorded in the Paris Agreement, and the victory of the people of Laos, recorded in the Agreement and Protocol on Laos, are major successes of the patriotic forces, which compelled US imperialism to make substantial concessions, and cleared the way for a just political settlement in that part of the world.

However, the common enemy of these peoples has not abandoned its designs; the war in Cambodia continues to rage; with US assistance the Saigon administration and the reactionary forces of Laos are doing everything to delay the enforcement of the signed agreements. It is necessary to work for the strict and scrupulous observance of the Paris and Vientiane agreements by all the parties.

The military operations against areas controlled by the Provisional Revolutionary Government of the Republic of South Vietnam must be completely terminated; the political prisoners held by the Saigon authorities must be released and returned to the parties concerned.

Above all, in view of the gravity of the present situation, it is necessary to proceed in accordance with the principles and aims of the political programme of the United National Front and the Royal Government of National Unity of Cambodia: the USA and its satellites should immediately cease their acts of aggression and interference in the internal affairs of Cambodia.

The closest support must be rendered to the peoples of Laos, Cambodia and Vietnam who, under different

THE MIDDLE EAST

The recent military explosion in the Middle East has shown with tragic impact the danger of the long absence of a peace settlement in that area due to Israel's continued persistent aggression, which is a danger to peace. The Israeli refusal to implement the UN resolutions are to the consequence of the continued occupation of Arab lands. It has confirmed also that such intransigence by Israel cannot yield success in the modern world. The latest decisions of the Security Council are based exactly on this, confirming, in fact, that in present international relations there must be no legalisation of annexation by force. These decisions show a realistic way to an immediate, just and complete settlement of the Middle East crisis. The basis of such a settlement is the immediate implementation of the Security Council resolutions of October 22, 23 and 25, 1973, the complete withdrawal of Israeli forces from all occupied Arab lands in conformity with the provisions of UN Security Council Resolution No. 242 and the basic principles of the UN Charter, as well as the full guarantee for the lawful rights of all the states and peoples of the region, and the rights of the Arab people of Palestine to return home and to self-determination, in accordance with UN resolutions.

EUROPEAN SECURITY AND COOPERATION

The successes of détente in Europe dovetail with the general trend toward an improvement of international relations throughout the world. Similarly, opposition to European détente is closely linked with conflicts and tensions in other regions of the globe.

That is why it is so important to do everything to speed up, extend and deepen the process of the development of European security and reject every attempt to slow down or compromise this process. This is so important to peace that it requires increasingly active efforts not only by governments but also by the peoples themselves and various public organizations on the European continent. In particular, efforts must be made to secure the signing, within a reasonable time and on the highest level, of the concluding documents of the Conference on European Security and Cooperation and also to set up a permanent body that would help foster the work that has been begun and guarantee its continuation.

Political détente, which today has received priority over military détente, is nonetheless closely related to the latter. Proceeding from this, efforts should be made to secure the speediest attainment of an agreement on ending the arms race in Europe and on reducing the numerical strength of national and foreign armed forces in Central Europe. However, at a time when the process of détente is expanding, certain circles are suggesting that the EEC should be turned into a military bloc and that it should even be given its own nuclear arms. Such plans, if they are realized, would strike a heavy blow at détente. On the basis of political and military security, equal economic, scientific, cultural and cultural cooperation — multilateral and bilateral — could make considerable headway. In particular, it would be possible to establish useful contacts and links between the different economic groups in Europe, notably between the CMEA and the EEC. As regards the expansion of cultural exchanges, its purpose is to foster peace, friendship and trust between nations.

PEACE AND SECURITY IN ASIA

Peace and security in Asia is threatened primarily by the imperialist policies of aggression, subversion and by dividing Asians against Asians.

The peoples of Asia have recorded major successes against these policies. The non-alignment policy adopted by many Asian countries is a valuable contribution towards peace, security and cooperation in the region. This basically anti-imperialist policy, the heroic victory of the Vietnamese people against US imperialism, the emergence of Bangladesh, the Japanese people's anti-militarist movement and steps to secure durable peace in the Indian subcontinent are welcome efforts against imperialist conspiracies. As a result, a decisive shift in the balance of forces for peace and freedom has been achieved.

The settlement of a number of extremely dangerous conflicts and crises provoked by imperialism and its aggressive policies and interference puts into still bolder relief the acuteness and scale of Asia's unresolved problems, which hinder the stabilisation of international relations on that continent. The principal task today is to defeat by concerted efforts the manoeuvres of the imperialists, who are trying to subvert sovereignty in furtherance of their neo-colonial aims.

The policy of creating a system of collective security in Asia, open to all Asian states, regardless of their social system, must be founded on the principles of peaceful coexistence in promoting the spirit of Bandung. It will unquestionably help to settle such important problems as the immediate elimination of still existing flashpoints of war and the worsening of the consequences of foreign aggression and interference. On this road it is necessary steadily to intensify the struggle to rid Asia and the Pacific region of nuclear tests, foreign military bases and military blocs. The earliest possible admission of the Republic of Bangladesh to the UN and the full normalization of the situation in South Asia, and the conversion of the Indian Ocean into a peace zone are essential elements of Asian security, the idea of which is receiving growing support and merits the closest consideration by the interested countries. Such a system could create the conditions for comprehensive Asian cooperation among Asian nations for their development and social progress.

The dialogue between the North and South Korea, begun on the initiative of the Korean People's Democratic Republic, was a further step towards the peaceful reunification of Korea on a democratic basis, without foreign interference. But obstacles were made by the South Korean authorities.

The governments and all the social forces in the Asian countries are faced with need of co-ordinating their approach to the problems of peace and security on that continent. In working out this approach it would be necessary to proceed from the universally recognized principles of peaceful coexistence and international security with due consideration for the submitted constructive ideas and principles.

DISARMAMENT

The atmosphere of distrust must be used for the practical settlement of the problem of ending the arms race and achieving disarmament. On this question only, the processes of international cooperation and disarmament must stimulate each other. Transitions to early and limited arms race it is necessary to go over to the practical reduction of armaments, and first and foremost, to outlawing weapons of mass annihilation, with the longer-term aim of general and complete disarmament.

For this purpose it is necessary:

- that the treaties and agreements on disarmament already signed, and whose importance is self-evident, should be strictly fulfilled and that they should be supplemented by countries that have not yet signed or ratified them;
- that all the five nuclear powers should sign a pact on the non-use of force, containing the commitment to ban nuclear weapons in perpetuity, reduce their military spending, employ part of the released funds for aiding the peoples of the developing countries, ensure the termination of nuclear tests in all spheres, and take further practical steps to end the nuclear-missile race and the improvement of nuclear missiles, and to achieve disarmament;
- that the proposals for the creation of nuclear free zones, the dismantling of foreign military bases and a ban on the siting of nuclear weapons on foreign territory should be implemented in practice;
- that a World Disarmament Conference should be held as soon as possible and the success of the talks now under way in reducing armaments and armed forces in Europe should be ensured.

THE NATIONAL-LIBERATION MOVEMENT - THE STRUGGLE AGAINST COLONIALISM AND RACISM

The peoples of Asia, Africa and Latin America are fighting against colonialism, neo-colonialism, racism, and third, national oppression, and for national independence and peace.

The forces of national liberation are one of the main elements of the world-wide anti-imperialist movement, of lasting universal peace.

The national-liberation movements lawfully represent their peoples and countries.

The existence today of colonial and racist regimes built on terror and truly barbarian exploitation of millions of people, is a monstrous anachronism. These regimes have the full support of international imperialism, which seeks to preserve them by the most disgraceful means and undisguised aggression. Colonialism and racism intensify tension in various parts of the world.

Every possible support and aid must be rendered to the liberation movement of the Asian, African and Latin American peoples fighting against colonialism and racism, and for self-determination and national strength.

It is necessary to work for the full isolation of the colonialist, fascist and racist regimes of Portugal, South Africa, and Rhodesia.

It is necessary to work for the full national independence of peoples still living under the colonial yoke of the United States, Britain, France, Holland, and Spain. All the peace forces must work for the complete and unconditional implementation of the many UN resolutions on the elimination of colonialism, apartheid and other forms of racism. These forces are now working for the fulfillment of the UN resolution on the Decade of Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination.

All the peace forces must work for the recognition of the Republic of Guinea-Bissau by all countries.

DEVELOPMENT AND ECONOMIC INDEPENDENCE

The process of international détente creates better conditions for resolving the economic and social problems of the Third World countries. So long as these problems remain unresolved or are complicated by imperialist interference and exploitation, they may touch off new international conflicts and create explosive situations.

It is intolerable that in this time of scientific and technical revolution, the legacy of colonialism and colonial social structures has not been overcome in a vast section of the globe, and that in many regions of the world there is still hunger, disease, economic and cultural backwardness, and poverty. Undoubtedly so, because all this is aggravated by the blackmail and pressure of international metropolises, which, hand in glove with local reactionaries, support or install anti-popular and blatantly fascist regimes.

The persistence and constructive efforts of the developing countries, fortified by effective international solidarity, could resolve these vital socio-economic problems and improve the living standard of hundreds of millions of people. This could be facilitated by a renunciation of military budgets everywhere, by strict respect for the rights of peoples to own and control their natural resources, by greater economic, scientific and technical assistance to the developing countries without any political conditions.

PROTECTION OF THE ENVIRONMENT

Mankind is ever more strongly conscious of the dangers stemming from the deterioration and destruction of the environment. The people of the world have a vital stake in protecting the resources of the Earth, our common home. And this requires active and multilateral international cooperation and rational use of natural resources. A persevering and consistent drive to re-deploy part of the means now spent on armaments for measures protecting and improving the ecological balance, the living and working conditions of all human beings, should be an organic part of these efforts.

It is necessary to work for the elimination of the extremely dangerous pollution of man's environment resulting from nuclear testing and the discharge of radioactive and toxic waste in rivers, seas and oceans.

COOPERATION IN THE FIELD OF EDUCATION AND CULTURE

International cultural cooperation and broader human contacts will be of great value in fortifying mutual understanding among peoples and nations and dispelling mutual prejudice and preconceived ideas. They will help combat the propaganda of military psychosis, fascism and ultraright ideology, chauvinism and racism, and everything else that undermines the moral health of the individual. But this effect will not be achieved unless cooperation in this field is based on the democratic principles of sovereignty, non-interference in internal affairs, and respect for the individual traditions and laws of every country.

In this context, it is possible and necessary to achieve broader and freer dissemination of information; better conditions for journalists to perform their professional duties; bilateral and multilateral agreements and exchanges concerning the use of mass media for a broader exchange of spiritual values.

The forms of international cultural cooperation are varied. Important among them are cooperation in education and the cultivation of the rising generation of lofty moral beliefs and values for all peoples; broader exchange of books, films, art forms and better practices in translating foreign languages; expansion of tourism and easier travel to other countries; professional and personal relations, and the like.

ECONOMIC, SCIENTIFIC AND TECHNICAL COOPERATION

Cooperation, scientific and technical, is not only a result, but also a guarantee of peaceful coexistence. It is constructed not by distinctions of social systems, but by international fairness, equality, and psychological equality. The rationalization of the world situation will, as it progresses, give rise to the impetus to the use in the interest of national economies and the benefits of the international division of labour, of scientific, technical and economic industrial cooperation, especially in the case of large-scale international projects.

International economic cooperation should be based on the principles of equal rights, mutual benefit and the creation of the most favourable conditions for trade and other economic relations. Attempts to impose political and discriminatory conditions, and to interfere in the internal affairs of the other side, should be firmly excluded from international practice. The system of world-wide economic relations should conform with the interests of all concerned and, in particular, contribute to the economic independence of the developing countries.

Every step closer to real disarmament is a step closer to the peaceful conversion of the economy, offering added opportunities for the development of the most effective export industries and the expansion of international efforts promoting scientific and technical progress.

SOCIAL PROGRESS AND HUMAN RIGHTS

To live and work in an environment of peace, freedom and social justice is the inalienable right of every human being. To this end, a climate of amiable, peaceful coexistence and friendly cooperation are essential for promoting social progress and human rights.

Poverty, unemployment and gross violations of human rights are rife in the world, and it is working people who bear the brunt of restriction of human rights. People cannot be genuinely free without possessing economic and social rights and their full guarantee, any more than they can be free without their civil and political rights.

The states and governments that have not yet signed or ratified the International Covenant on Human Rights must do so to bring them into force. Adequate implementation machinery should be provided. The possibilities of existing organs, such as peace-keeping, should be fully deployed.

The use of torture in the process of ending existing humanization conventions relating to armed conflict is not only inadequate but often ignored. It is recommended that such measures be avoided by the United Nations to remedy these grave situations.

The right to life is inalienable for every person and should be protected by law; and states should move towards the total abolition of capital punishment. The right to life also raises the problem of the right to refuse to kill.

It is imperative to eradicate all forms of discrimination based on race, ethnicity, sex, language or religion.

Working conditions must be improved, while slave and forced labour must be abolished. Health and housing conditions must be improved. Effective and comprehensive systems of social security are needed universally must be established and decent public education provided. The plight of migrant workers has to be solved.

Cooperation on many levels will be needed, for example, among nations within and without international organizations; among trade unions, youth, women's, religious and other public organizations; and among lawyers, economists, sociologists and other scientists.

In every country the citizen should have equal access to the fruits of social progress. All economic, social, civil, political and cultural rights must be secured for the most

COOPERATION BETWEEN INTERGOVERNMENTAL AND NON-GOVERNMENTAL ORGANISATIONS

It is especially important that the efforts now being taken on the government level to establish the principles of peaceful coexistence and on the NON-GOVERNMENTAL level to moderate the doctrine and give greater depth to cooperation, between various peace forces should also be continued in more vigorous cooperation between NGOs themselves and intergovernmental organizations, global, such as the UN, and regional as the Organisation of African Unity, the Arab League, etc.

Cooperation between the two groups of international organizations is one of the ways in which public opinion can participate in world affairs, which is of particular importance in the light of the objective, increasing role of social forces, which are united into different movements and organizations concerned with the fate of the world.

Non-governmental organisations can contribute to the efforts of intergovernmental organisations to solve the most important international political problems, such as settlement of international conflicts, setting up of security systems, promotion of disarmament, the struggle against colonialism and racism, the problems of economic and social development and the conservation of the natural environment, and implementing decisions of intergovernmental organisations by expressing as well as enlightening public opinion in support of the said function of UN and other intergovernmental organisations.

To be able to fulfil this purpose, the NGOs — not least the INGOs — should together study and define areas of common interest and action, especially in relation to the UN system.

CHILE

The fascist push in Chile has shown once again that the policy of the imperialist, reactionary forces poses a great danger for people taking the path of freedom and independence political and social development. The overthrow of the legitimate Popular Unity Government of Salvador Allende is a reminder that the international monopolies, and the forces of external and domestic reaction are prepared at any time to mount a counter-offensive, including an armed coup, to establish a military dictatorship and plunge the people into a bloodbath.

Chile's experience shows once again that the struggle for democratic local, for basic human rights, and for the strengthening of legality and the rule of law and order based on the will of the people, is closely bound up with an active policy of peace and equal cooperation in the international arena. The tragedy of Chile demonstrates once again that the forces which are against détente, against consolidating international security are the same forces which attempt to hinder the search of the peoples along the road of national liberation and social progress.

The growing solidarity with the Chilean people, the struggle against terrorism and violence by the people, for the liberation of all Americas and peoples. For the genuine rebirth of Chile is necessarily a part of the movement for the construction of a universal, just and democratic peace. It is inspiring truly world-wide proportion.
